HISTORY OF SUNS

From so so to superb or what a difference a year makes.

The Phoenix Suns, after a so so first year record of 16-66, vaulted into national prominence in their second year with a 39-43 record, a tie for third place in the National Basketball Association's Western Division and then scared the uniforms right off the Los Angeles Lakers in the NBA West playoffs by bolting to a 3-1 series lead before bowing to LA, 4-3.

And it hasn't stopped yet.

For Phoenix fans have adopted the Suns like they would a long lost son. In their first year the Suns had 750 season ticket holders, which jumped to approximately 1,700 in the second year and this year season ticket holders have leaped to figures which may top 3,500 — fourth best in the NBA.

Phoenix has the smallest population market in the league, which is just one more fact that Phoenix loves the Suns.

The Suns were born on Jan. 22, 1968 when in New York the Board of Governors of the NBA voted Phoenix and Milwaukee into the league raising the member of cities to 14, which now has been raised to 17 with the addition of Buffalo, Cleveland and Portland this year.

Officials of the club are Richard L. Bloch, president; Donald Diamond and Marvin Meyer, vice presidents; Donald Pitt, secretary-treasurer, and Larry Kartiganer, assistant secretary.

Jerry Colangelo, general manager of the Suns, took over coaching duties at midseason when Johnny Kerr resigned after 1½ years as head mentor. Colangelo, who had never coached a team in his life, fined, maligned, and whipped the Suns into a shape that eventually led to the playoffs.

Two Suns made the All-Star game in 1970, Dick Van Arsdale for the second year in a row and Connie Hawkins, the first Sun to gain a starting berth on the team.

Hawkins then became a first for the Suns as he was voted All-Pro, the first Sun to receive that honor.

Trades again played a big part of the Suns. After the season Gail Goodrich was traded to the Lakers for Mel Counts, who becomes the Suns first seven footer and Jim Fox was traded to Chicago for Clem Haskins. At the start of the season Dick Snyder was traded to Seattle for the services of Art Harris.

Van Arsdale, following the trades, became the last remaining member of the original 1968 Suns and was named captain of the squad just before training camp started in September.

Although the Suns were downed by the Lakers in the playoffs they showed that they were in the NBA to play as well as stay. And many of the record 12,000 plus crowds that turned out for the playoff games will be back in 1970-71 to watch their Suns.

JERRY COLANGELO, GENERAL MANAGER

When Jerry Colangelo, general manager of the Phoenix Suns, says something, sooner or later it is bound to come true.

"When I came to Phoenix I said that I would produce a winner here," Jerry said.

"Our first objective in 1968-69 was to make the playoffs," Jerry said.

In the Suns second year, they were in the playoffs and almost pulled off one of sports major upsets by pushing the Los Angeles Lakers to seven full games in the quarter-finals of the playoffs before bowing four games to three.

He's not through yet.

The Suns improved 100 per cent in their second year thanks to trades that Colangelo pulled off, trades that brought such players as Jim Fox, Jerry Chambers and Paul Silas to the Suns. Then he and Suns president Richard Bloch brought to Phoenix a bona-fide super star in Connie Hawkins.

Jerry went to the trade market again during the off season and this year new faces in Clem Haskins, acquired from Chicago for Jim Fox and the Suns first seven footer, Mel Counts, who comes from Los Angeles in a trade for Gail Goodrich, will bolster the Suns chances of making the playoffs again this year in hopes that they can go farther than just the quarter-finals.

And Phoenix has been eating it up.

Prior to coming to Phoenix, Colangelo had served as Director of Merchandising and chief scout for the Chicago Bulls. He is a former prep standout at Bloom Township High School in Chicago Heights and was key member of the front office setup when the Bulls were added to the NBA in the 1966 expansion move.

Jerry played his basketball at the University of Illinois and was team captain his senior year (1961-62).

Although he had never coached a team in his life, when Johnny Kerr resigned at midseason last year, Jerry stepped in and took over the coaching duties of the club in addition to his general manager job.

Making good his words, Colangelo brought the Suns out of the dumps and guided them into the playoffs, not bad for a guy who had never coached before.

Colangelo and his wife Joan, have three children — Kathy, 8; Kristen, 7 and Bryan, 4 and make their home in Phoenix.

PHOENIX SUNS PROSPECTS

Another new look, with a new coach, new players through trades and a good rookie outlook, are in store for National Basketball Association fans when the Phoenix Suns take the floor for the 1970-71 season, the third for the Arizona team.

The new coach is Lowell "Cotton" Fitzsimmons, who, before joining the Suns, coached two years at Kansas State University and nine years at Moberly Mo.) Junior College.

"Assuredly, it's a challenge coming into the NBA — the ultimate in basketball," Cotton said of his appointment. "Adjustments must be made on all levels of the game and I feel equal to the task."

The Suns pulled off two big trades that figure to help the team tremendously in the upcoming NBA wars. First, general manager Jerry Colangelo acquired Clem Haskins from the Chicago Bulls for Jim Fox, then sent Gail Goodrich to the Los Angeles Lakers in a trade for seven foot Mel Counts.

Those two, plus the returning starters in All-Pro Connie Hawkins, Paul Silas and Dick Van Arsdale, who takes over duties as captain of the squad, seem to be the choice for the starting five. In addition the Suns have second year men Neal Walk, and leapin' Lamar Green, the only 6-7 man in the league to out jump Lew Alcindor in the center circle. Art Harris, the super quick third year man from Stanford, returns at guard.

The Suns lost Jerry Chambers and Stan McKenzie in the expansion draft, both going to Portland, although Chambers was traded to Atlanta for another ex-Sun in Gary Gregor.

Four rookies made the Suns this year and promise to add some needed depth to the squad.

Number one draft choice Greg "Stretch" Howard leads the bunch. A 6-9 leaper from the University of New Mexico, Howard scored 43 points and snarred 23 rebounds in his first professional game, against the rookies from San Diego, and was improving nicely during preseason play until a broken hand slowed him down.

Number two draft choice Fred "T" Taylor got off to a slow start during training camp but came around as the camp and preseason progressed. The super quick guard from little Pan American College scored 30 points and grabbed 13 rebounds against the San Diego freshmen.

Army veteran John Wetzel rounds out this year's squad. A 6-5 guard from VPI, Wetzel displays a good knowledge of the game on the court and will add to the Suns attack with ball control. He played briefly with the Los Angeles Lakers before being drafted by the Army. While in Uncle Sam's service, he was picked up by the Suns in the expansion draft.

LOWELL "COTTON" FITZSIMMONS, HEAD COACH

"Most people think that you just throw out the ball and let them play in the NBA. I don't think that's true, you have to do a lot of coaching in this league. If I didn't think that was true, then I wouldn't have accepted this job."

And that's the way the Phoenix Suns new coach, Lowell "Cotton" Fitzsimmons, views the game of basketball and the way he plans to conduct it in Phoenix.

He hasn't disappointed any one.

From the start of rookie camp, when Cotton took over the controls of his first professional team, even a casual observer could tell that he meant exactly what he said about coaching in this league.

His all out drive and hustle carried over to the regular training camp and although he had a lot of veterans grumbling, they all agreed that the man knew the game of basketball and what he wanted to do with them and it.

In 11 years as a head coach, two at Kansas State University and nine at Moberly (Mo.) Junior College, the 38 year old Fitzsimmons has compiled an impressive record of 258 victories against 78 losses.

"After interviewing numerous top college coaches it became evident that Fitzsimmons was exactly the type of coach I was looking for — a fiery competitor and a man looking forward to a big challenge," said Suns general manager Jerry Colangelo on Fitzsimmons' appointment.

"He enjoys a tremendous amount of respect from coaches and players around the country and we are in complete agreement regarding basketball philosophy and what it takes to win in the NBA," Colangelo continued.

Last year Cotton's KSU team was a preseason pick for sixth in the Big Eight but copped the league title and with an overall record of 20-8 battled their way into the NCAA playoffs. The Kansas State five fought strong New Mexico State down to the wire in the NCAA tournament semi-finals before bowing to the Aggie quintet.

That impressive showing in the Big Eight earned him Coach of the Year honors in that league.

Fitzsimmons, his wife, Nancee, and 15 year old son Gary make their home in Tempe.

KTAR TO BROADCAST

Joe McConnell, a veteran of 13 years in broadcasting, has been named as the new "Voice of the Suns" and will be heard on KTARadio, 620kcs as he broadcasts all 82 Suns games and on selected televised games on KTAR Channel 12.

McConnell joined the Suns and KTAR this summer. His latest broadcasting duty was in Denver, Colo., where he did Denver Bronco football over a 50 station, six state network. While in Colorado he also did University of Colorado sports on a Colorado network.

McConnell was born and raised in Indiana and graduated from Franklin College in 1962. His first broadcast came in 1957 when he did a Franklin College basketball game.

After graduation McConnell started gaining his experience in his home state. He did football and basketball broadcasts at Indiana State and worked for two years at the Indianapolis Speedway, plus doing various sports shows on television and radio across the state.

McConnell will be joined by "Hot Rod" Hundley, the former West Virginia All-American and six year veteran of the Los Angeles Lakers. Hundley worked two years as color broadcaster for the Laker organization before joining the Suns last year.

McConnell and Hundley will be broadcasting all the Suns games, home and away.

Mel Counts — 7-0 — Center-Fwd

"It depends on the coach and the players, on how much we want to work, hustle, proper attitude, etc. We can go as far as we want to, if, the players and coach believe in themselves and have the all needed confidence."

That's how the Phoenix Suns' first seven foot player evaluated the prospects for the Suns this season.

Mel Grant Counts, a 7-0, 235 pounder, one of the best shooting big men in the NBA, joined the Suns during the mid-season in a trade that sent Gail Goodrich back to the team that originally drafted him out of UCLA, the Los Angeles Lakers.

A natural center, Counts was drafted out of Oregon State in 1964 by the Boston Celtics. After helping the United States Olympic team win a gold medal in Tokyo, Mel joined the Celtics, but lived in the shadow of Bill Russell for two seasons. He was traded to the Baltimore Bullets for Bailey Howell in 1966 and then went to the Lakers in 1967.

In L.A. he got a chance to play and responded with three outstanding seasons in a row. In 1967-68 he split time at center with Darrall Imhoff and averaged 11.7 points per game with 732 rebounds. In '68-69 he backed up Wilt Chamberlain at center during the first half of the season, but his shooting ability was no good to the Lakers if he were on the bench and in mid-season he became a starting forward and finished that season with a 12.4 scoring overage and 600 rebounds.

Last season, playing some of his best ball against the Suns, Counts averaged 12.6 points per game with 683 rebounds in 81 games, spending most of his time at forward.

"It doesn't make any difference where I play," Mel said. "Just as long as I can play and help the team."

After spending a month in his home state of Oregon during the off season, Mel spent the rest of the time lifting weights and playing basketball in Los Angeles. While he concedes that shooting is the strongest area of the game, Mel said that this season he hopes to improve on his movements offensively, team defense and rebounding.

Because of team play both offensively and defensively Mel picked the Knicks as the toughest team in the NBA last year and because of strong personell and team work he picks the Knicks and Lakers as the best for 1970-71.

Len Chappel gave Mel the biggest headaches last season. "He over played me — I didn't move to get open against him," Counts explained.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 10/16/41 Coos Bay, Oregon. Married, wife's name Nedora Nell, three children, Brent 4½, Brian 3½, Christopher 1½. Plans to go back to Oregon after NBA career and enter into business. During off season helped to put on clinics for Athletes for a Better America in Los Angeles area.

Lamar Green — 6-8 — Fwd-Center

Lamar Anthony "Sweetmar" Green is optimistic about this year's version of the Phoenix Suns.

"We were a young, inexperienced team last year that didn't know each other's moves, but this year each player should know what another is going to do when he gets the ball, we'll be one of the best in the NBA this year."

And Sweetmar, who's added an inch to his frame this year, will be right in the thick of the battle this season, especially when it comes to grabbing rebounds to start that fast break.

Green, who some said took rebounds out of the rafters last year, admits that that phase of his game is his strongest, has worked during the off season to improve his offensive and defensive game.

However, there are some that will say that his defensive game doesn't need that much improvement. In one game last season, when the Suns were deeply involved in their stretch drive for the playoffs, Green rejected three straight shots in the final minutes to help win a crucial game.

Green is a relative newcomer to the game of basketball. He didn't start playing the game until he was a junior at Carver High School in Birmingham, Ala. And the only reason he started then was because his coach almost forced him into it because he was the tallest kid in the school at 6-5.

"I couldn't even dunk the ball when I started playing and was I ever ridiculed," Green recalls. To alleviate that problem he went off by himself and worked on his jumping with sand bag weights strapped to his ankles.

From sand bags to the nation's third leading rebounder in six short years. That's how the story went from there. Green went to Morehead State (Ky.) where, as a senior, he had a 15 point per game average and led his club with 18.1 rebounds per outing, good for third in the nation.

He was first team All-Ohio Valley Conference his junior and senior years and played on the Kentucky All-Star team twice.

During his senior year, Green out-rebounded 7-footers five times, hit over 48 per cent from the field and was on the Citrus Classic All-Tourney team. In his first year in the NBA he dueled the likes of Alcindor and Chamberlain for rebounds and usually got his share.

Like most of the Suns, Green considered the New York Knicks the best of the league last year, mainly because of "good team defense."

Lew Alcindor gave Green the most problems last year. He's tall and plays the game well," Lamar under-stated.

But as far as prospects for the Phoenix Suns this year? "The sky's the limit," according to Green. A lot of people will say Lamar reaches that limit every time he leaves his feet for a rebound.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 3/22/47 in Birmingham, Ala. Married during off season, wife's name is Helen. Graduated from college with a BS in industrial technology, plans to get a Master's in Business. Favorite subjects in school were physics, trigonometry and algebra. Traveled and played golf during off season. Shoots golf in low 80's, lettered in that sport in college as well as basketball.

Arthur Harris — 6-4 — Guard

Arthur Carlos Harris, Jr. joined the Phoenix club early in the season last year in a trade that sent Dick Snyder to Seattle and zap! Just about that quick he left his impression on Phoenix fans with his blinding speed and tighter than fly paper defensive play.

In his very first game in a Suns uniform Arthur scored 16 points and became known as one who could come off the bench cold and ignite the Suns sputtering offense by setting up fast breaks and breaking the opposition's momentum.

He finished the year with a 7.8 scoring average and finished seventh on the club in minutes played.

A rookie out of Stanford in 1968-69, Harris was thrust into the starting lineup with the SuperSonics when injuries sidelined Rod Thorn and did such a bang-up job he was rewarded with a spot on the NBA All-Rookie team.

Harris was fourth on the Sonics in scoring with 993 points and a 12.4 average and only Baltimore's prize rookie, Wes Unseld and San Diego's Elvin Hayes saw more playing time than Arthur.

Art played "an awful lot" during the off season and wants to have more concentration this year in an effort to improve his game. He feels that defense, speed and directing the offense are his strongest points.

Like most players on the Suns and in the NBA, Arthur thought the New York Knicks were the best in the league last year because of their defensive play, but does not want to take a guess at who will be top dog in the loop for the 1970-71 season.

Harris, like Paul Silas, wants to go to law school after his career in the NBA and when he wasn't working to improve his game during the off season, he traveled on the West Coast. He belongs to the Army Reserve in order to fulfill his military requirements.

Clem Haskins — 6-4 — Guard

"The day I left Chicago," recalls Suns General Manager Jerry Colangelo, "Clem Haskins came up to me and said 'I want to play for you.' "

And now, two years later, here he is.

Clem "The Gem" Haskins, a three year veteran of the NBA wars, joined the Phoenix club during the off season when the Suns traded Jim Fox to the Chicago Bulls for the services of the Gem.

The number one pick of the Bulls in 1967 was perhaps a bit too cautious as an NBA freshman, scoring only 679 points — a 8.9 average. But in the next season he got untracked and became a regular starting guard and scored 1,716 points for a 17.2 average.

He led the Bulls in assists that season with 306.

During his three year career at Western Kentucky, Haskins scored 1,680 points, an all-time school high, and averaged 22.1 points a game, best in school history. He was named player of the year in the Ohio Valley Conference three years in succession.

Haskins, who hopes to become a coach after his NBA career, admits that scoring and passing is the strongest area of his game, hopes to improve on his field goal and free throw percentage in his first year with the Suns.

The Suns? They'd like nothing better.

To get started in that direction, Clem played in a summer league during the off season.

"The prospects for the Phoenix Suns this season is very good, if we play as a team," Clem said. "New York will be the team to beat of course, because of their team defense, and their ability to play together."

"Greg Smith gave me the most defensive problems last season because we were once teammates and he learned my weaknesses," Haskins stated.

"I don't think anyone ever likes to get traded," admitted the former Bull. "If I had been forced to go to probably any other city in the league I wouldn't have been happy. But now? I'm the happiest guy in the world."

One minor reason he's happy: "I'm just glad to get the chance to play on the same club with Dick Van Arsdale — instead of against him. When that guy goes for the basket . . ."

Another reason: "I'm going to like living out here. I'm a small town boy (Campellsville, Ky.) and Chicago was too big for me. We've found a house out in Tempe and we're going to enjoy the peace and quiet," Clem said.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 8/11/44 Campbellsville, Ky. Married, wife's name is Yvette. Two children, Clemmette, 4½, Lori Ann born in July. Attended graduate school at Western Kentucky University during off season. Comes from a family of six girls and five boys.

Connie Hawkins — 6-8 — Fwd-Center

Who knows what Connie Hawkins is going to do next?

In his first year in the NBA Hawkins did everything and more of what was expected of him when he led the Suns in scoring with a 24.6 average, was a starting forward on the West team in the All-Star game and was on the first team All-Pro squad.

To top it off, he led the upstart Suns in their attempt to knock off the mighty Los Angeles Lakers in the playoffs, only to fall one game short, losing to the Lakers four games to three. In the playoffs "The Hawk" averaged almost 26 points per game.

Hawkins was a prep All-American at Boys High School in Brooklyn in 1960 and then decided to attend Iowa University where he dropped out after the basketball scandals of 1961.

After a lucrative career in the ABL, with the Harlem Globetrotters and the ABA, where he set all kinds of records, Connie was cleared of his participation in the scandals and allowed to play in the NBA.

Like all Suns players, Connie was asked to fill out a questionnaire. To say that his answers were unique, well . . .

Military experience: "R.O.T.C. I fought in the ghetto."

Toughest team in the NBA last year: "Phoenix. I was on it."

Plans after pro career: "I plan to have Jerry Colangelo's job."

Improve your game in the off season: "Yes, I left it alone."

Strongest area of your game: "Being out there on the court."

What do you think of the rookies (strong points, weak points): " have seen the rookies play, and you are right, they have strong points and weak points."

But Hawk can also be serious. He wants to play better defense this season and shoot more to improve his game.

And as General Manager Jerry Colangelo once said: "Connie Hawkins can be as good as he wants to be."

PERSONAL INFO: Born 7-17-42 in Brooklyn, N. Y. Married, wife's name is Nancy. Two children, Shawna Lynn, 7; Connie Jr. 3. Wrote his life story with Dave Wolfe of Life Magazine during the off season. Also participated in track at Boys High School, winning two letters in that sport.

Greg Howard — 6-9 — Forward

"The greatest single game by one man since Elvin Hayes beat UCLA."

Those were the words Sports Illustrated used to describe Gregory Darryle Howard's performance against New Mexico State in 1969 when "Stretch" scored 35 points to knock the Aggies from the ranks of the undefeated.

If Sports Illustrated had been covering the Phoenix Suns rookie game against the San Diego Rocket freshman it would have been interesting to see what they would have said.

For in that game Howard, the Suns number one draft choice in 1970, scored 43 points and added 23 rebounds to lead the Suns rookies to a 125-116 win over the Calvin Murphy led bunch from the California city.

Howard played one season at Hartnell Junior College where he averaged both 26 points and rebounds per game to earn All-Conference honors and be ranked second in the league in scoring. Howard was twice named to the All-City team while playing at Fifth Avenue High School in Pittsburgh.

In two seasons at the University of New Mexico, Stretch averaged 14.4 points and 9.7 rebounds as a sophomore and 19.7 points and 10.6 boards as a junior. At the end of his soph year he was named to both conference and UPI All-Western Athletic Conference second teams as well as being named to the New Mexico State opponent team.

In 1969, when he scored his career high of 36 points against Arizona and had games of 35 at New Mexico State, 31 at Utah and at Denver, Howard was named to the All-WAC first team.

Stretch dropped out of New Mexico after his junior year and played for Sardinia in Italian Industrial basketball in 1969-70 where he was third in scoring and rebounding.

A great leaper, Howard out-jumped the Suns' Lamar Green, a feat which in itself is quite an accomplishment.

"Howard is a great front line performer, who rebounds and shoots well and will add depth and power to our existing line," said Jerry Colangelo, general manager of the Suns when Howard signed his contract.

Colangelo hasn't changed his mind.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 1/8/48 in Pittsburgh, Pa. Won letters in volleyball as well as basketball at Fifth Ave. High in Pittsburgh. Was voted MVP at New Mexico his junior year. Wants to work with disadvantaged children after his pro career.

Paul Silas — 6-7 — Forward

Paul Silas wants to go to law school after his career in the National Basketball Association.

While in the future he may be involved in court battles, Paul will be back for his second year as a Sun, involved in board battles.

Silas, acquired from the Atlanta Hawks for the 1969-70 season to boost the Suns rebounding power, did just that by leading the club in sweeping the boards, averaging 11.7 caroms per game.

And he had his second most productive year scoring wise, averaging 12.8 points per contest, fifth best on the team and only four points short of the 1,000 points per year club.

Paul's best year with the Hawks was 1967-68, when he scored 1,097 points, a 13.4 average.

Silas was the Hawks second round choice in 1964 after he was graduated from Creighton University, where he made several All-American teams in his junior and senior years. He led his school to 57 wins in 82 games during three varsity years and set six all-time school marks.

During the off season Paul took time off to take a tour of the Pacific for the USO, visiting troops in hospitals and bases, then did a two week tour of duty for the reserves. In between he worked on his shooting, an area he hopes to improve on for the '70-71 season.

When asked what team he considered the toughest in the NBA last season, Paul tabbed the New York Knicks. Why? "Don't ask me that!" Paul said jokingly.

Well, what individual gave you the most defensive problems last season?

"Dave DeBusschere, he's a real tough player," Silas replied.

Silas took his own team when asked what he thought would be best in the NBA this season, because "we have the best material and the most togetherness."

Paul was around to see this year's rookies play and was impressed.

"They are all tough and should help the team immensely," he said.

Silas was happy to be traded to Phoenix last year, mainly because he was coming to a place that is "nice and warm."

He warmed the place up even more with his rebounding tactics and has become known around the loop as one of the toughest rebounders in the NBA.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 7/12/43 in Prescott, Ark. Married, wife's name is Carolyn, two daughters, Donna 11 and Paula 3. Was member of Alpha Sigma Nu fraternity in college. Makes his home in Tempe.

Fred Taylor — 6-5 — Guard

Fredrick Ollie Taylor, 6-5 guard from Pan American College and the Phoenix Suns number two draft choice last year, is undecided as to a career he wants to pursue after a jaunt with the NBA, which isn't too surprising for a 22 year old.

But a lot of people are sure that the slender speedster (it has been said that he has six speeds forward and two in reverse) has a long and productive career ahead of him in the NBA.

Fred, who's nickname is "T", became Pan American's first athlete to make a major college All-America team when he was named to the Helms Foundation 66th annual team his senior year.

And that's after two other alumni of the school made a name for themselves in the NBA — Luke Jackson and Otto Moore.

"Fred Taylor is an even greater pro prospect than Luke Jackson," according to James Brooks, athletic director at Pan Am.

"Taylor's speed and shooting ability make him a strong pro prospect . he fits the pro game better than anyone we've had besides Jackson and Moore," said Sam Williams, Taylor's coach at Pan Am.

Fred's shooting ability showed up in his statistics during his career at Pan Am.

As a freshman he tallied 647 points in 22 games for a 29.4 average and grabbed 488 rebounds. As a sophomore his scoring average was 21.4, as a junior he had an 18.8 mark and finished his career with a 27.9 senior year. In his last three years he snatched 699 rebounds in 76 games, playing forward as well as guard.

"T" promised Phoenix fans that they will have something to look forward to when he played in the Phoenix-San Diego rookie game, which culminated the Suns rookie camp in June. In that game he scored 30 points and grabbed 13 rebounds and showed some good defensive tactics.

He played 42 minutes of that game, connected on 10 of 26 field goals, which varied from long jumpers to deceptive drives, hit 10 of 18 free throws and dished out three assists. His 30 points was third to teammate Greg Howard's 43 and super-rook Calvin Murphy's 37, high for San Diego.

Taylor, who needs nine hours to complete his degree in physical education, comes from a family of 10 children and has a brother that plays high school ball in his home city of Houston.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 2/5/48 in Houston. Single. Favorite food is veal cutlets and likes to dance. Makes his home in Phoenix. Played basketball at Phyllis Wheatley High School in Houston. Father is a machinist and mother is housewife.

Joe Thomas — 6-6 — Forward

Joseph Randle Thomas is one of those in between players in the National Basketball Association at 6-6 he's too big to —play guard and too "small" to play forward — or so they say.

The only problem with that is that someone forgot to tell Joe.

Thomas, who played his collegiate ball at Marquette, was the eight round draft choice of the Suns in '70 and turned out to be one of those "sleepers", a player that isn't really supposed to make the pros, but does.

Joe did it on pure hustle and desire.

"Joe is the type of player that if he were told to run four wind sprints, he would run five," said his collegiate coach, Al McGuire.

While at Marquette Thomas was voted to Alpha Sigma Nu honor society, won the Outstanding Student Award and the Outstanding Athlete Award and won three basketball letters. In 1969 Thomas was part of Marquette's Milwaukee Classic Championship team and their 1970 NIT Champions.

In his senior year Thomas averaged 13.0 points per contest and 8.4 rebounds. But because of Marquette's controlled offense Joe's statistics are very deceptive. All five of the Warriors' starting squad averaged in double figures and three of the five averaged over eight boards per game.

On their way to the NIT Championship the Warriors tangled with Pete Maravich and the LSU Tigers. Thomas led his team with 28 points to a 101-79 victory.

Joe went to Marist High School in Atlanta, Ga., and won three basketball letters.

In his junior year at Marquette Thomas averaged 8.9 points and 8.8 rebounds per game, playing center as well as forward and as a sophomore averaged 3.9 and 3.6 respectively.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 6/27/48 in Canton, Ga. Single. Majored in Business Economics in college. wants to go into Real Estate after pro career. Likes to ride motorcycles and horses. Has two brothers and two sisters. Favorite subject in school was economics.

Dick Van Arsdale — 6-5 — Guard

When asked what individual gave him the most defensive problems last season Richard (Dick) Albert Van Arsdale answered Jerry West, "because he is unstoppable."

Ask Jerry West or any other guard in the NBA who they hate to see most driving down the lane with a full head of steam and they would probably say "Dick Van Arsdale" or maybe Tom Van Arsdale, Dick's twin brother who plays for Cincinnati's Royals.

For when Van gets up to full speed (which is generally 110 per cent of the time) even a Mack truck would think twice before stepping in to stop him. And it's been this kind of play that has earned Van a variety of nicknames, but the one heard most common around Phoenix is "Mad Dog."

This year Van may earn yet another nickname, that of "Cappy" or something similar. For when Gail Goodrich was traded back to the Los Angeles Lakers, Van was named captain of the Phoenix Suns.

And how does the team captain view the prospects for the 1970-71 Suns?

"If we play team ball, we could go all the way," Van Arsdale said.

Driving and defense have always been a trade mark of Van Arsdale basketball, but with added responsibility of being team captain, plus being still in the process of getting used to the switch from forward to guard, Van has worked to improve other areas of his game.

"I've spent a lot of time during the off season practicing ball handling, an area I expect to improve a lot on this season and shooting," Van Arsdale said. In between this, Van spent his summer doing sports broadcasting on KTAR television in Phoenix.

Besides Phoenix, Van Arsdale thinks that New York and Milwaukee will be the best in the NBA this season.

"New York has developed a winning tradition which is a psychological edge and they have all their key men returning. Milwaukee, with (Lew) Alcindor and (Oscar) Robertson, should lose few games. Robertson brings the experience and leadership they need," Van said.

Van Arsdale was the Knicks' second round draft pick in 1965 and was Phoenix' number one pick in the expansion draft in '68

Dick and Tom were born and raised in basketball country — Indiana. The twin brother act gained much national publicity while playing at the University of Indiana. Dick won first team Big 10 honors and was named first team, Academic All-American.

Last year Van was the Suns' number two scorer (behind Connie Hawkins) with a 21.3 average and was named, along with The Hawk, to the West's All-Star team, his second year in a row to receive that honor.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 2/22/43 in Indianapolis, Ind. Married. Wife's name is Barbara Irene. Daughter Jill Irene was born in July. Belongs to the Indiana Air National Guard. Lettered in basketball, track and baseball while attending Manual High in Indianapolis. Was graduated from U. of Indiana in '65 with a degree in economics. College coach was the late Branch McCracken, well known for his Indiana basketball teams.

Neal Walk — 6-10 — Center

When asked what team he considered the best in the National Basketball Association last season, Neal Eugene Walk chose the New York Knicks and Milwaukee Bucks because "We didn't beat either once."

Never one to mince for words, the big 6-10 second year center for the Phoenix Suns chose the very same two teams when asked who he thought would be the best of the NBA this season.

"The Knicks for the obvious reason and the Bucks because of the addition of Oscar (Robertson) to an already good team," Neal explained.

And what do you think are the prospects for the Phoenix Suns this season? "Outstanding," says Walk.

When the Suns end their 1970-71 "outstanding" season, Neal Walk will probably be rated as one of the "outstanding" reasons.

After a slow start last year, the big rookie finished seventh in scoring on the team with a 8.2 average and was the only Sun to play in all 82 regular season games.

Walk played in five of the seven playoff games against the Los Angeles Lakers and averaged 8.0 points and 7.0 rebounds against Wilt Chamberlain.

To improve those statistics Walk worked out with weights, ran and played five days a week during the off season.

That work may improve some of the defensive problems he ran into last year, i.e., what individual gave you the most defensive problems last year? "Every center in the league, because they are all good."

The number two player picked in the 1969 collegiate draft (behind Lew Alcindor of the Bucks), Walk came to the Suns with some impressive statistics from the University of Florida.

As a junior and senior Walk teamed with Pete Maravich of LSU as unanimous picks for the All-Southeast Conference team. During the '67-68 season he was the only major college player in the nation to rank among the top 10 in both scoring and rebounding and as a junior he led the nation in rebounding with an average of 19.8 takedowns per game.

In his senior year he was named to many All-America teams.

This year Walk is the only "true" center on the Suns. Mel Counts, the seven foot transplant from the Lakers will be there to help out, but he also plays forward, as does rookie Greg Howard and sometimes center, most of the time forward, Connie Hawkins.

But that doesn't bother Neal. As he said when he came to the NBA: "I wanted to see if I could play with the best, every athlete wants to find that out in top competition, it's a matter of personal pride."

PERSONAL INFO: Born 7/29/48 in Brooklyn, N.Y. Single. Brother Warren plays basketball at the University of Texas-El Paso. Father Albert is an advertising man in Miami, Fla. Won three varsity letters in basketball at Miami Beach Senior High School. Makes his home in Phoenix.

John Wetzel — 6-5 — Guard

John Frances Wetzel has had to wait for some time to play in the National Basketball Association.

First he was drafted by the Los Angeles Lakers fresh out of Virginia Tech and had a chance to play in 38 games before getting drafted by another team — Uncle Sam's. He played two years on that team and while he was participating in Army khaki he was drafted by the Phoenix Suns in the expansion draft of 1968.

So, John Wetzel is a well traveled 25-year-old and is now ready to get down to some serious basketball.

And he played some serious basketball when the Suns rookies took on the freshman from San Diego at the end of this year's rookie camp. Wetzel, playing guard, played 34 minutes in that game, hit one of five field goals, eight of 10 free throws, good for 10 points. He added three rebounds and two assists for a creditable night's work.

In 38 games as a Laker, Wetzel scored 139 points for a 3.7 average, had 84 rebounds and 51 assists, shot .437 from the field and .761 from the line.

While at Virginia Tech John not only won three letters in basketball, but took time out long enough to win two more in track. At high school, in Waynesboro, Virginia, Wetzel won two letters in basketball and two in track.

PERSONAL INFO: Born 10/22/44 in Waynesboro, Va. Married, wife's name is Diane, son Mark, 1½. Father is a pipe-organ builder in Waynesboro, mother is a housewife. Has two brothers and one sister. Needs 12 hours to get a degree in general science, minored in education.
